“I cannot believe my boyfriend was killed at my parents’ funeral. And on the same day, my cousin the only family I have left, gets locked up. Then I found out I was pregnant within weeks of those tragedies all at only nineteen-years-old.”

What are you to do in a world so cold all alone? That's the question Nayaria had to ask herself on a daily. After being faced with tragic life or death situations, she finds herself all alone and trying to pick up the pieces of life. Everything seemed to be looking up for Nayaria until she gets laid off from work causing her to get kicked out of her place. She tries with all she has to fend for herself and her son, but nothing seems to work in her favor. That’s until she gets a surprise gift she's reckoned to put put her life back together, but tragedy strikes again.

Akaush

“I got caught up one night and was about to be charged with attempted robbery, but the judge gave me two options after learning about my home life, and since I didn't have a gun, the judge was willing to give me a second chance. The judge was sympathetic when he learned that my mother was schizophrenic, and my father worked almost all day and night to pay for everything she needed to function. That left me to take care of my six-year-old brother, Akeylo, not just mentally, but materially, as well by any means.”

Akaush, is a good boy that had to turn to the gritty streets of his hood to stay afloat for himself, and his brother’s sake. He makes sure his family is straight by getting it by any means, until he gets caught up in the streets. But he quickly realized staying in the streets is like playing Russian Roulette with his life. So he's ready to leave the streets behind, but it seems like every time he tries to leave the streets keep pulling him back, in deeper. Can they get out of there before it's too late?
